

Hello y'all,

Happy pi day! This week in the States, medical students across the country will learn if and where they have "matched" for their graduate residency training. I was relieved to hear that all of my friends successfully matched today, so now we wait with bated breath to see where everyone ends up on Friday. :)

I'm proud to say I completed the Cambridge Half last weekend with a time of 2:03:52. It was perfect jogging weather and I was able to keep picking up the pace as the race continued. I've never thought of myself as a sporty person or a runner, but I've made so many friends on this journey that it would be a shame to stop running now! There is another group from our school that will run the London Landmarks half marathon next month, so hopefully we will continue to train (and eat brunch) together.

While in Cambridge, I met up with none other than fellow Rotary scholar Ryan Sutherland, who generously took the time to tour me around town even when the weather was absolutely horrid. It was fantastic to meet someone so accomplished and to chat about our mutual interests in public health and medicine - between the two of us, y'all should definitely have optimism for the future of American healthcare!

You may have been wondering about the lag time between last weekend's race and this email - sad to say, I started feeling somewhat sickly in the middle of last week and tested positive for COVID on Thursday. Thankfully I am through the worst of it, but I am all too eager to rejoin this life and people of this city once I am fully recovered.

Best, Christopher Wong
Baylor College of Medicine, M.D. Candidate 2023

Modeling at the Salon

Ready to Race!

Smiling for the Camera 😊

Almost to the end!

Group Photo at the Finish!

At the Finish!

Concert at the Royal Festival Hall

King's College

King's College Chapel

Punting over the River Cam

Spring Blossoms

The Eagle Pub